

ores, raw sugar, hemp, flax, raw wool, and works of art.

A FIGHT WITH A RHINOCEROS.—News comes of an unfortunate accident to Lieutenant Von Hohnel, during his African expedition. Chanler and Hohnel went hunting elephants, and were in the thick forest when Lieutenant Hohnel saw a rhinoceros about to attack him. He sprang to one side, but the rhinoceros quickly turned, and the next moment the lieutenant found himself on the ground with a tusk wound in his body. The rhinoceros tried to pierce his right thigh repeatedly, but did not succeed, as the lieutenant was lying flat on the earth, and also wriggled out of its way. The rhinoceros then pushed the wounded man several times with its snout, struck another heavy blow, and then ran off snorting. When the lieutenant was found and helped away, he had only the one wound where his flesh was torn; but he grew worse, his body swelled, he could take no nourishment, and the expedition could do no less than march back to the coast. During the march it was molested daily by rhinoceroses, who attacked it without provocation. On the 14th October Hohnel reached the Scotch Mission at Kibucki, where he is now being nursed.

A ROMANTIC ELOPEMENT.—The New Orleans Times Democrat publishes the following, dated

