"The sate diffractions in the Convention have not been attended with the confequences expeded; they are fo far from favouring the Counter-Revolutionity, that they feem to have artice wholly from a jealouty of fuch a disportion in forme of the Members; and there is no doubt of those, who as prefent have gained the afcendancy, being more determined Republicans than those they have arrifed, though soffelied of much lefs moderation.—There enthulation into account the latter of the arms against the infurgents and Spaniards, contributed to excite the populace in their tavour, and to overthrow the power of the Girondist; at least for the prefent, though it does not appear likely that they will be proceeded against with rigour, or long held under arreft.

"The address from Norwich to Mr. Fox is the fubject of much convertation here, and greatly approved of; it will, probably, not a little affift the motion which he is to make this day.
