
A TWO HORNED RHINOCEROS.

Mr Jamrack, of Ratchiff Highway, is at this moment the fortunate possessor of a female two-horned rhinoceros from Sumbra (minus one horn which she knocked off), and of her two horned calf. The two horned rhinoceros is very unlike his one-horned cousin, whom Albert Durer depicted with his hide nailed on to him with tent nails—not in sport or disablerie, to which he was always prone, but out of sheer ignorance. The skin of the two horned rhinoceros is smooth and fits him tightly like that of a pig. He is dangerously quick scented, nimble, and active. He is in short, the most dangerous animal in the world—unless we are to make a special exception in favour of a genuine rogue elephant, who has developed a taste for man killing. It is to be hoped that the mother and her infant may find their way to the Regent's Park.
