- 4 Peeper Fever—Comes spring, the frogs of North America court and couple with reckless abandon while our intrepid reporter becomes equally driven to photograph them
by Joe McDonald
- 10 The Conspicuous Consumption of Rhinos—A vast global trade in virtually every part of the rhinoceros—from internal organs to horn—has played a major role in reducing the five remaining species to perilously low numbers
by Esmond Bradley Martin
- 20 A Very Special Bear—While pursuing the study of tigers and rhinos in a Nepalese national park, two field scientists discover some vital characteristics of Asia's little known sloth bear
by Andrew Laurie and John Seidensticker
- 26 Where Have All the Bluebirds Gone?—Now's the time to begin building nestboxes and invite one of North America's wildlife treasures back from the brink of extinction
by Lawrence Zeleny
- 33 Not So Wild Animals I Have Known—(with apologies to Ernest Thompson Seton)—Libby, the Pygmy Hippopotamus Escape Artist
by Jack L. Throp
- 35 Zoo/Aquarium Reports

About the cover: The African black rhinoceros has been known to charge with great force when provoked, but at its present rate of extermination, it charges only toward oblivion.

Photographed in Ngorongoro Crater by E.R. Degginger

Back cover: Protective coloring makes this gray treefrog difficult to spot against the branches of its arboreal home in Pennsylvania. Often only its call betrays its presence.
